In room 6 of the McFarland building is lying today an old man in a wretched condition, the result of wounds inflicted by his own son, the weapon used being a walking cane. The victim of blind ferocity is Joseph C. McPherson, an old soldier, near seventy years of age. A suit for divorce was tried in the district court this week in which his wife was the plaintiff, and out of that trial grew the trouble. When seen by a Journal reporter this morning he was lying on a lounge in a room devoid of other furniture except a stove and chair. There was a pile of cobs intended for fuel on the floor. His attendants were two of his children, a boy and a girl. Asked as to how he received his injuries, he told substantially the following story: "I went down to Herings vinegar factory last night between 8 and 9 o'clock and remonstrated with him regarding some false testimony that he gave at the divorce trial the other day. I had my cane which I always carry in my hand, and was gestulating with it, when he crowded up to me, saying, 'Hit me, hit me; hit me with it.' I told him I didn't want to hit and not to crowd me. Then he took the cane out of my hand and struck me on the side of the head," indicating the left side, "and on this side," indicating the right, "and then I knew no more until I found myself here under the care of the doctor." He exhibited various bruises, which he said were obtained in the same way. He is in bad shape and the attending physician is unable to determine as to the result. He says he wants the boy, whose first name is Floyd, and who is about 20 years of age, punished to the fullest extent of the law.
